Studying abroad for better

Nowadays, though costing a great deal of money, abroad study tours are still obtaining soaring popularity, and those who decide to go overseas are becoming younger and younger. The reasons for such phenomenon vary, and different individuals have different opinions. As far as I'm concerned, these people all have a common goal — to own a better future and life.

To anatomize the purpose behind studying abroad, initially, let's take a deep look into the difference between education in China and overseas. In china, students get used to following what lecturers say. We are supposed to sit still in class asking no questions to teachers even though you still have doubts in order to show respect to teachers. Moreover, Schools in China shape students in the same way, what count in school are not your personal interests but your grades and GPA. While in Western countries like America, students are granted to have dynamic thoughts and imagination. They study more freely, always asking "why" to their instructors either in class or after class. Schools in the United States work hard to develop the distinction between different students, in which way every student can find his own merit, not being a machine merely knows how to solve the problems in books. As a consequence, the western way of education gives students more edges over others comparing to the Chinese way.

Besides the advantage on education, there are quite a few benefits for your future when you choose to have overseas study tours. To begin with, foreign countries always have cultures different from us Chinese. So, studying abroad offers us a chance to broaden our horizon and give us an international perspective. What's more, studying abroad will make young students become more independent. The experience of studying abroad can also enrich our Curriculum Vitae so that we will win in today's job-hunting battle back home.

When it comes to those who aim to settle in other countries, abroad study tours would help students learn the local language and culture, apply for student visa to get temporary residence, get familiar with the country's society, accumulate experience to prepare for permanent settlement so that they will have a better life living overseas in the future.

In conclusion, the experience of studying abroad can benefit those who aim to achieve great things, and that's why more and more Chinese young students choose overseas study tours.
